

Montgomery diaries come to Guelph

Dear Anne with an'e':

The diaries and private papers of internationally acclaimed Canadian author Lucy Maud Montgomery have been acquired for the University of Guelph library collection.

The acquisition is a boon for Guelph's social historians, Canadian literary scholars, rural sociologists, family studies faculty and complements Guelph's already outstanding Scottish Collection, notes Chief Librarian Margaret Beckman.

Montgomery is best known for Anne of Green Gables, a book beloved by Canadians of all ages. Translated into 36 languages and sold around the world, it depicts life in turn-of-the-century Prince Edward Island, the province where Montgomery was born. While she continued to write under her own name, Montgomery was known as Mrs. Ewen Macdonald in many rural Ontario communities where her husband was the Presbyterian minister.

The diaries were purchased from Dr. Stuart Macdonald, only surviving son of Montgomery, and a Toronto physician. Dr. Macdonald is pleased to have the diaries permanently located here because of the interest among Guelph faculty members, and because he wanted them to be close enough to Toronto for him to be able to continue to see and use them.

Because of the personal nature of much of the diary material, access will be restricted for another 10 years. The exception will be Professor Mary Rubio of the University's Department of English Language and Literature. Prof. Rubio has Dr. Macdonald's permission to use them to prepare a published edition. Prof. Rubio says she will also be working on the authorized biography of the noted Canadian author.

The diaries begin when the author was 15 years old and contain, in minute detail, her observations of life in small communities of Ontario and Prince Edward Island. As the wife of a rural Ontario Presbyterian minister, Montgomery provides an informed view of

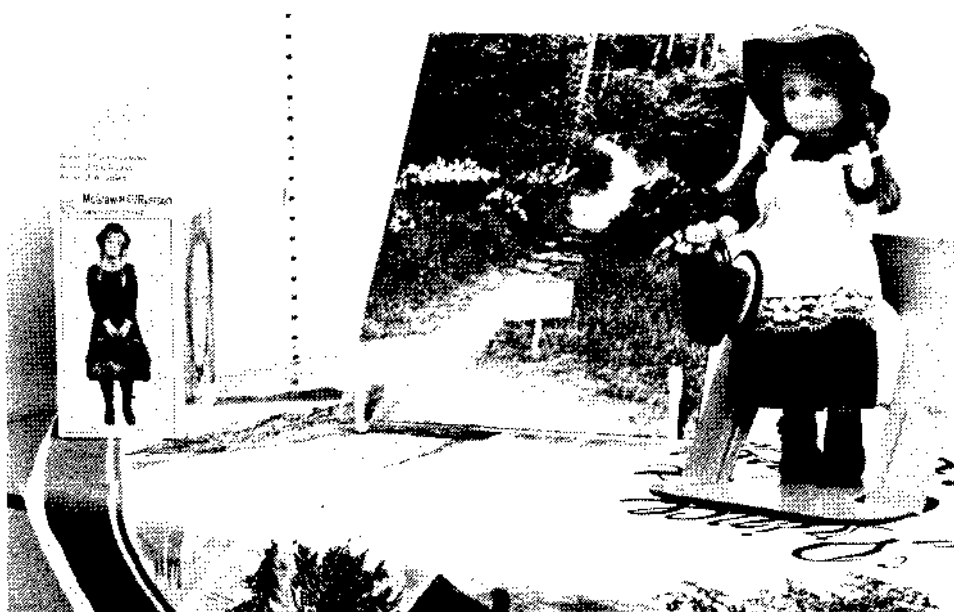

The diaries and other papers will enhance the University's already pre-eminent Scottish Collection and prove useful to faculty members such as social historians, Canadian literary scholars, rural sociologists and those in family studies. President Forster, centre, examines a volume with Prof. Rubio and Dr. Macdonald.

Canadian social history during her lifetime. The writings span the entire period from 1889 until the author's death in 1942.

It is said of Mrs. Macdonald that she was very conscious of her role as a minister's wife and was very careful never to answer the manse door in a soiled apron. The result was that in preserving season she often used five aprons in a single day.

Montgomery portrays small town cultural life and the bustling Toronto literary scene. She talks about the process of creating her books and experiencing the fame that they brought. The diaries also contain acute comments on life in the small communities where she lived as well as on events in the larger Canadian context.

The 10 leather-bound diaries contain an estimated two million words in her beautifully legible handwriting. They are unusual in that they contain frequent photos of people, houses and places of interest pasted in to augment the text. Five additional large scrap books contain newspaper clippings, reviews of the author's books, and other memorabilia. □

*The Lucy Maud Montgomery display in McLaughlin Library features an "Anne" doll and other reminders of Green Gables as well as photos and artifacts relating to her and her family.*

Meeting of October 20, 1981.

Plans for a University equine research centre moved closer to the starting gate last Tuesday. Senate gave its approval in principle to the University ERC on the condition that capital and operating costs are obtained from outside sources.

Chairman of the Research Board and of the ERC committee, Associate Dean, Russ Willoughby, OVC, presented the proposal to Senate. He explained that the ERC will serve the racing, riding and work horse industries in Ontario by providing high quality facilities for a systematic and concentrated research program dealing with major problems in equine health, breeding, production and management, and other aspects of the horse industries.

At the present time there are deficiencies in the numbers of people to help and service this large and diverse industry which employs thousands of people, explained Prof. Willoughby. Research is needed, and so are training programs to provide desperately needed graduates, he added.

The government and the horse industry are giving support and leadership for the centre, and OMAF is offering new money, but the ERC is expected to be self-supporting. It will have an advisory committee made up of industry, government and University representatives, and the progress of the ERC will be reviewed in five years.

The ERC will need 300 acres of land and new buildings and paddocks. Dean of Research, Bill Tossell, responded to questions on land acquisition by explaining that it may not be necessary for Guelph to seek new land for the Centre. Several options are being explored for the use of existing land, he said. President Donald Forster added that many of the details of the proposal have yet to be worked out. Buildings and equipment are expected to be provided from donations and grants from organizations. On completion, it is expected that long-term maintenance of facilities would be similar to the research stations at Arkell, Elora, Cambridge, Guelph and Woodstock.

The ERC will support five new full-time equivalent faculty positions and staff which will provide high quality research. These people will add impetus and new dimensions to existing undergraduate and graduate teaching programs. Most of the new faculty will assume supervisory roles in graduate student education and will be training scientists for positions related to the equine species in private industry, government and university. The ERC will provide research laboratories, horses, and technical assistance for faculty members who wish to conduct equine related studies. Another major component of the ERC will be the establishment of a research information service for collection and dissemination of information relative to equine research. This service will be on a cost-recovery basis.

Staff Association scholarship

The University of Guelph Staff Association has put its members' money to work toward making the University more than just the place where employees earn their money.

Using interest gained from term deposits of their dues, the Staff Association members have established a $500 scholarship to be applied toward the cost of study at the University of Guelph. The group hopes to present the initial award, intended for use in the second semester of study, in the winter semester of 1982.

The scholarship will be available to Staff Association members, to their families, and to former members. The recipient does not, however, have to be working at the University of Guelph to apply for it. Based on grades, the award will go to an individual who is connected to the UGSA, and has, in the words of secretary-treasurer, Jennifer Reader, Chemistry, "made it through" to reach the second semester.

Staff Association members are currently entitled to use up to three hours a week for attending classes. If they wish to have more time they may negotiate the time on a replacement basis. A certificate program, like the one offered in computing science, is a popular area of pursuit, explains Ms. Reader. However, there is a growing number of staff members who are looking toward completing degrees.

The Staff Association hopes that the award will encourage all those eligible to gain further education. □

Violinist joins faculty The musical journey of a returned native

The return of the native, as Marianne Pashler calls her move from Albany, New York, to Toronto last year, has resulted in the accomplished violinist's becoming part of the University's music faculty this fall.

Born in Hamilton and educated in Toronto, this widely known musician began her professional life with a recital given in Toronto when she was 11 years old. As part of her Canadian musical life, she also performed with the Toronto and Quebec Symphonies and gave recitals for CBC and Hart House. But marriage moves, if not necessarily in strange ways, and Mrs. Pashler found herself with her physicist husband in Schenectady, New York, for a 30-year stay.

However, Mrs. Pashler continued to perform all over the northeastern United States; both a featured soloist and chamber music enthusiast, the violinist played some 40 concerts a year. In addition, she made frequent FM broadcasts, and served as concertmaster for the Schenectady and Albany orchestras. This heavy schedule, plus her many teaching activities inside and out of school settings, made up a full career for this particular native to leave behind on her return to the Toronto area.

The one-hour's drive from Toronto, which she finds easy to do, brings Mrs. Pashler to the University of Guelph every Thursday. As a veteran teacher who, besides having her own studio classes, served on the faculties of Union College and the Emma Willard School, the musician looks forward to working in a university setting. Her love of teaching is matched by her enthusiasm for broadening the age range and span of skills with which she can work.

Highly interested in chamber music, Mrs. Pashler intends to stress this kind of work in her classes at Guelph. Her broad performance experience brings special benefit to students as a model of responsible as well as responsive musicianship. She not only has the experience of aiding conductors as concertmaster, but also full awareness of the ins and outs of conduct as soloist and group member.

Most of all, Mrs. Pashler brings to her beginnings at Guelph an immense zest for all things musical, and for living a rich life through creative effort. She feels musicians are particularly fortunate to have a "handle" on a process which renews itself every time a piece is conducted, since, as she says, "a musician never finishes with a piece." Each time she/he returns to it, attempting once more to bring the music to life, it gives back to the artist the vitality and power she/he invests in it.

For this returned native, there is in music, the constant return to giving and taking that never stales and always makes the "journey" worth it. □

Monetary Economics in Developing Countries

Subrata Ghatak

A one-year visiting professor in the Department of Economics, Subrata Ghatak, has produced a book which provides a concise and comprehensive analysis of the basic principles of monetary economics and their application to the less developed countries (LDCs).

The professor from the University of Leicester, England, has paid careful attention to the balance between theory and empirical evidence. The book uses the most recent data from a wide variety of LDCs. It discusses such central issues as the monetarist and Keynesian controversy, the contrast in the stability of demand for money in developed and LDCs and policy implications, the role of money in economic growth, the relationship between money, inflation and economic growth, the Polak model, monetary policies, the international monetary reform, the role of special drawing rights, and international capital flows to LDCs.
