University of Guelph researchers are working to create a world where differences are welcomed. ReVISION: The Centre for Art and Social Justice explores ways that marginalized and misrepresented communities can challenge existing stereotypes through arts-based research and engagement projects. Research participants explore their own lived experience of disability and difference, body image and gender identity, and Indigenous art and education. This work is changing perceptions about difference and disability and has uncovered new ways of making life more accessible.

TELL YOUR STORY TO CHALLENGE STEREOTYPES